INVOCATION: The Invocation was given by Deacon Vincent DeFedele of Corpus Christi Church

Deacon DeFedele noted he was invited tonight to give the invocation that he had planned to give at the 9-11 Memorial Service which had been cancelled due to rain. The invocation was as follows:

“We have come together as a community of believers to remember those who have lost their lives to comfort their families and friends and to let them know how much we love and care for them. The painful memories and wounds will always be with us so as we come this evening before the Lord. Let us first thank him for all of the many blessings he has given us. May he heal the wounds that we carry, may he help us to live the truth and live for Him. May he continue to give us the courage to trust and the strength to always help others in need. Lord, help us all to be better people and pray and love our enemies so that they will be touched and bring them to their knees. I lift up to you all the heroes and there are many who gave their lives for us and who continue to give themselves every day to keep us safe. Help us to be your light in the darkness by

What the American Flag Means to Me

Read By: Rich Cannici

What is the American flag and what does it represent? For many Americans the flag represents freedom, pride, and justice. Our flag stands for freedom because of the many lives that had to be lost throughout history for us to be the nation we are today. The American flag stands for pride because of the many American soldiers men and women who lost their lives for us. Lastly our flag stands for justice because in the United States no matter what crime we do we have the right to a fair trial.

Another view of the American flag is the colors red, white, and blue. Some American see the color red as blood for all the blood shed on the battlegrounds. Another color white for victory or triumph in our great nation of America. Lastly, the color blue for the sadness or sorrow felt because of the lives lost in war.

To some Americans the biggest meaning of the American flag and the colors red, white, and blue came on September 11th, 2001. On September 11th the attack on the twin towers opened up the eyes of many Americans. It was not only an attack on the twin towers but also to the American people. When this attack on September 11th had happened 343 firefighters had lost their lives not including the many American civilian casualties. Al-Aida and the Iraqi regime believed it would tear America apart, but it didn't, it only made us stronger. After this attack we came up with the saying “These colors don't run” meaning American is forever and will always be free.

Some people see the American flag as patriotism. These people are the ones who have their flags out all year around. The ones who always have them flying high. Some of these people even have American flags hanging off their cars. To some people the American flag is their son or daughter who they have lost either in the line of duty in the military, on the police force, or even the fire department.. Although it's sad but true some Americans have no patriotism and could care less what happens around them. These people will only care if it affects them in a harmful way. Lastly, the Americans with no type of patriotism will be the first to complain or say the government has done something wrong.

ESSAYS (cont'd):

The first American flag represented the 13 colonies, with its 13 stars and 13 stripes. Today, the American flag has 50 white stars, which represent the 50 states of America. The 13 white and red stripes which represent the 13 original colonies. Although the colors red, white, and blue are a part of the flag they have no meaning toward the land we live in.

9/11 Attacks on America
Read By: Joseph DeQuinzio

On September 11, 2001, four passenger planes were hijacked by terrorists. Two of the planes were flown into the twin towers of the World Trade Center (WTC) in New York City, causing huge fires that led to the collapse of the towers less than two hours later. One plane crashed into the Pentagon building in Washington, D.C. The last plane crashed into a field in Pennsylvania; it is believed the hijackers had planned to crash this plane into a building or landmark, but were foiled by the actions of the plane's passengers. Many of these horrific events, including the second plane's crash into the World Trade Center and the collapse of the towers, were witnessed live by millions of television viewers. It was by far the worst terrorist attack on American soil; conservative columnist George F. Will labeled it "the most lethal terrorism in human experience."

As the dust settled in New York and Washington, Americans were left to ponder what the attacks meant for the nation. In search of a historical precedent or point of comparison, many Americans reached back to Japan's surprise assault on Pearl Harbor on December 7, 1941, another "day of infamy" in which the United States was suddenly attacked. In both instances, a seemingly secure nation was jolted by massive assaults on its own soil. "As Pearl Harbor snapped America out of a false sense of security," NBC news anchor and author Tom Brokaw writes, "September 11 had a similar effect on young Americans."

The comparisons Brokaw and others made between the two dates dealt not only with the attacks themselves, but also how the American people responded to them. Many people wondered whether the resolve and unity shown by the American people in 1941 would be matched in 2001. Other wondered whether September 11 would become a defining experience for this current generation of Americans, much as Pearl Harbor had been for members of a previous generation. In attempting to answer these questions, it is instructive to note both the parallels and differences between the two events.

Both Pearl Harbor and the September 11 attacks resulted in a large loss of human life. The attack on Pearl Harbor killed 2,388 people. The September 11 carnage was even larger, although an exact number was difficult to ascertain at first. In the initial weeks following

Borough of Hasbrouck Heights - 9/22/2009

ESSAYS (cont'd):

September 11, the rough media consensus for the total number of fatalities at the WTC, the Pentagon, and in Pennsylvania was six or seven thousand (numbers cited by some of the articles in this volume). As weeks and months went by, that number consistently shrank, eventually reaching three thousand.

The September 11 casualties were not only numerically larger than a military attack against American military targets. Most of the casualties were sailors or soldiers; of the 2,388 people killed, forty-eight were civilians. For the most part, the September 11 attacks were directed not at soldiers or military targets, but at civilians going about their everyday jobs. For many, the fact that the September 11 terrorists targeted civilians made these acts even more outrageous and horrific than the events of 1941.

Another important difference between the two events was the identities of the attackers. On December 7, 1941, Americans knew who the enemy was - the Japanese Empire- and what its intentions were - to wage war against the United States. On September 11, 2001, Americans knew they had been attacked and perhaps were even at war, but they did not know who the enemy was or what their future intentions were.

In the days following September 11, 2001, some answers to these questions were found. Investigators from the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) and other law enforcement agencies identified the nineteen air passengers that they believed were responsible for the attacks. The presumed terrorists were all men from Middle Eastern countries, including Egypt and Saudi Arabia. Suspicion quickly zeroed in on an organization called al-Qaida (the base), a terrorist network led by Osama bin Laden, a Saudi Arabian exile who had taken up residence in Afghanistan.

Thus, Americans were facing significantly different enemies in 1941 and 2001. Historian and World War II veteran Frank Mathias notes that Japan was a powerful nation with 191 infantry divisions and a large navy, as well as the support of Germany and Italy, while al-Qaida had "no navy, no organized army, no airforce." However, the absence of such resources did not prevent the shadowy terrorist organization from inflicting the damage of September 11.

In both 1941 and 2001, Americans responded quickly and patriotically, but were called upon to do different things. In 1941 Americans swamped military recruiting stations or waited for draft notices and sacrificed personal comforts for the war effort. In 2001 Americans expressed support for the paid professionals of the U.S. military and were called upon to spend the United States out of economic recession. Both eras were marked by upswings of patriotism and unity that extended to the federal government. Following the Pearl Harbor attacks, U.S. president Franklin D. Roosevelt addressed Congress and called for a declaration of war against Japan. Congress, previously divided and strongly isolationist, passed a war declaration with only one dissenting vote. Following the September 11 attacks, President George W. Bush addressed Congress, argued that the evidence pointed to al-Qaida, and called for a “war on terror” that “will not end until every terrorist group of global reach has been found, stopped, and defeated.” He issued an ultimatum against the Taliban regime in Afghanistan, which he accused of harboring bin Laden and his network of terrorists. Congress, which earlier in 2001 has been preoccupied with domestic issues and partisan disputes, passed (again with one dissenting vote) a resolution authorizing Bush to use military force.

America’s war against Japan in 1941 resulted in victory in 1945. America’s war against terrorism is incomplete. On October 7, 2001, after marshaling diplomatic support worldwide, the United States began a bombing campaign in Afghanistan. By the end of 2001, Afghan rebels, assisted by U.S. bombing and special forces, had toppled the Taliban regime, and numerous al-Qaida officials were either killed or captured (Osama bin Laden himself, however, remained at large).

The successful yet inconclusive results of America’s initial military campaign again highlight the differences between 1941 and 2001. America’s war against Japan not only had a clear enemy, but a clear objective – Japan’s defeat and official surrender. America’s war against terrorism promised no such clear-cut solution. Even if Osama bin Laden were to be captured or killed, that would not necessarily signal the end of terrorism’s threat to America. Bin Laden’s followers and other terrorists hiding in nations such as Pakistan, Somalia, and the Philippines will likely prove to be elusive targets.

Both the Pearl Harbor and September 11 attacks resulted in an upsurge of patriotism. Following September 11, Americans purchased and proudly displayed the national flag. Hundreds of millions of dollars of charitable contributions flowed to organizations and individuals to help the families of those killed. Partisan differences in Washington were temporarily put aside to pass national security legislation. But the unity of spirit that the United States showed in the day, weeks, and months following September 11 did not necessarily translate into uniformity of opinion. Virtually all American and foreign observers condemned the actions as horrible and unjustified. Differences of opinion remained, however, on the difficult question of why these particular individuals did something so horrible (at the cost of their own lives).

The September 11 Generation
read by Marissa Romano

There has been much talk about how the events of September 11 changed everything. I don't think they changed the central urgency and relevance of what each one of us does with our life.

I think we're all being pressured by history. How many people have lost their jobs or are re-evaluating their work and lives? Those of us who are concerned about the issues of diversity, coexistence, reconciliation, conflict prevention, understanding and tolerance, peace and justice, will find our life gives us a firm ground to stand on. This is where the action is for the foreseeable and unforeseeable future. Clash of civilizations? War of the worlds? Global discord, intergroup ignorance, suspicion and fear. Many thoughtful people and institutions were studying and addressing those questions long before September 11.

Now the efficacy of tens of thousands of diversity awareness training sessions is put to the test. This is our performance review. What beneficial effect have we had in all these years? We have seen so many people rise to the challenge of the occasion. We have seen the cumulative effect of humanity shining through fire and smoke, we have heard so many people speaking about the importance of peace and understanding.

Two hours on Tuesday morning are having enormous ripple effects. What if we called this the next level of diversity awareness training? How are we debriefing it? We need to continue. It is a case study for sensitive training, for strategic planning, for risk assessment, knowledge management, religious understanding. I can't think of an activity that is not affected. Groups may need us to convene and moderate the discussion, to provide guidelines for interaction, to be facilitators. We have numerous opportunities. We can speak about the interconnectedness of people and cultures. We can help to define patriotism in a new way. We can offer ourselves as resources in forums, classes, religious services, panels, talk shows, to provide alternative ways of thinking and acting. We can assist people to learn and teach about different cultures, religions, nationalities. What have you been doing?

In one fell swoop the importance of our work has been put into start relief against the horizon. I hear about people who have just realized the truth of being a citizen of the world. Thinking people have been practicing this craft for many years. I think groups and institutions need us.

I think we need to see a new generation of people do this work. They are the September 11 generation, whose hearts and minds were opened or turned around in the wake of the airplane crashes. We should take on new volunteers, interns, trainees, and partners. We should reach out to colleagues across occupations, sectors, industries. We need more roundtable discussions, more sharing. I don't think there are trade secrets in the area of human community.

How can we call on each other? We're not organized to be cooperative or networked or linked in general, we don't have an alumni association, we're not exactly a movement with a phone tree of people to mobilize for action or support in a crisis. Maybe we should be.

The people who were killed, injured, and displaced September 11 were from more than 80 countries. They have many millions of family and friends. The shock waves will be felt for a long time.

There is plenty for us to do. People are newly mindful fo the fragility of life. The suddenness of events. The value of relationships. The interdependencies of the world.

In the meantime, questions multiply too fast. We need dreams and visions, ideas and music. Not every question has an answer, but it's important to keep asking questions anyway. They are the raw ingredients of our imagination.

The HHFD was on standby for the Wheels and Wings Expo at Teterboro Airport and the Outdoor Mall Sept. 19. October 4-10 is Fire Prevention Week, for more details fireprevention.org. He printed some information on that site including almost two-thirds of reported home deaths in 2003-2006 were from homes with no smoke alarms or working smoke alarms. He reminded residents to change the batteries when the clocks change. EMS and fire calls continue to increase and commended the volunteers. Referring to the plane crash last month, he sadly reported one of the pilots did not make it. Under Streets & Sanitation, he reported on August 27, a call was received by the DPW of a possible illegal discharge from a warehouse into Riser Ditch. Superintendent Spindler and Construction Code Official Melfi responded to investigate, finding a blue-green solution polluting the stream. The DPW sewer equipment and personnel were called in to locate the source where it emanated from. After opening all the storm water manholes and checking the entire storm water system the source was not found. Next the entire sanitary waste water system was checked again nothing was found. Then Spindler,

Borough of Hasbrouck Heights - 9/22/2009

FIRE, STREETS & SANITATION (cont'd): Melfi, Angelo Roccamo, and Steven Daus traversed the Riser Creek. After some time, they discovered two 55 gallon drums dumped illegally into the stream. They called the Hasbrouck Heights Police Department who dispatched the Bergen County Haz-mat, the NJ Department of Environmental Protection (NJDEP), and the Hasbrouck Heights Fire Department. Leaking from the barrels was a blue-green substance which was condensed off and 1,000 gallons of water from the stream was backed out by the NJDEP. The matter is under a criminal investigation. NJDEP case # 1545-25.

The DPW performed some sanitary sewer maintenance at the 100 block of La Salle Avenue which was completed after coordinating with the BOE who cleared the sewer laterals at the High School before school opened. Also, the Franklin Avenue sewer pumping station was cleaned and serviced. A call was received by the DPW of a report of a sink hole at 220 Williams Avenue near a sewer main. The DPW responded by video taping the sewer system in that area. After reviewing the tape it was found that no damage of any kind was involved with the Borough's system. The homeowner was notified that a possible dry well on their property was in need of repair. Repairs were made to Garbage Trucks 101, 103, 106, Mason Dump 204, Fire Department Ambulance, Ladder Truck, Rescue 614, Pumper 616 and 48 hours of service and repairs to police vehicles.

Mayor Heck gave a brief report, thanking the Business Community committee for the good job on the Outdoor Mall on September 19 with Cliffhanger Productions. There will be a meeting to evaluate that event. The Street Fair is again planned for the Spring. She had attended a Teterboro Airport meeting on wild geese problems and had received good hints including keeping the fields clean that the children use, that if the fields are kept clean of bird feces, the geese don't come, that deterrents only work for a day or two. She reported that our biggest concern was the environmental basin that the DOT placed on Route 17. The airport manager questioned the Mayor on it but they will be notifying the FAA as the DOT should have notified them because if it is attracting wildlife they need to know. She received an e-mail that another DOT meeting is scheduled for October 1. She thanked all the children from Euclid and Lincoln schools who had sent her get well cards, they were very uplifting and she was most appreciative. She also thanked everyone for the outpouring of love and attention.
